By JAMES A. EDGERTON.
In the language of the vernacular, it has been some campaign. It has seen several surprises, and election day will probably bring out a job lot of new ones. It is no small stake that is up. Not only every seat in the house of representatives, and therefore the control of that body, depends upon the cast, but thirty United States senators, more or less, and governors in a majority of the states. Bigger than all of these, the result on Nov. 8 will have not a little to do in determining the outcome of the presidential election in 1912.

This article is in no sense an attempted prophecy. There are enough prophets—at least in their own minds—to fill the papers with guesses without any addition on my part. Moreover, the thing is so nearly over that a prognosticator would no more than work off his prediction than the result would bob up to confound him. Let the campaign managers be the oracles. That is their business. They have to convert themselves into claims bureaus just to show that they are not scared. Nobody pays much attention to them, but they feel in duty bound to claim the earth and the offices thereof. For the rest of us there is more serious business. We have to vote. It is our turn now, and we swell up not a little as we reflect that we have the last word.

Notwithstanding the congressional election much of the popular interest has centered in the gubernatorial fights in a number of the leading states. New York has been most in the calcium rays perhaps, not only because of her size, but for the reason that Colonel Roosevelt's personality has been literally hurled into the canvass. There has been some mention of the opposing candidates, Stimson and Dix, it is true, but where their names have been whispered once the colonel's has been shouted ten times either in applause or oburgation.

Of course, both sides, following T. R.'s lead, say they have their opponents "beaten to a frazzle." What else could they be expected to say? As to the voters, they have been too much stunned by the noise to do much prophesying. Where they have ventured an opinion of the result their prognostications have generally followed their party bias. If we depend on money to talk, the betting odds supporters confidently predict his election as governor.

The progressives swept the Kansas primaries, triumphantly renominating Walter Roscoe Stubbs for governor. It is said that the railroads, breweries and standpatters have made a secret organization to defeat Stubbs.
Over the line in Nebraska the question of county option is the chief issue. James C. Dahlman, the "cowboy mayor" of Omaha, is the Democratic candidate for governor. Dahlman says he will veto a county option bill. For this reason W. J. Bryan has bolted his nomination. The Democrats at present have the governor and legislature, but the result this year is very much in doubt.

House May Be Close.
As to the national house of representatives, both congressional chairmen claim it by a large majority. A New York magazine recently made a canvass of the situation that it said extended into every doubtful district in the land and as a result of which it predicted practically a tie, with thirteen districts uncertain. If the house should be close the insurgents would be in a commanding position, as they have nominated something like fifty candidates, most of whom are reasonably sure of election. It is generally admitted that both the Democrats and insurgents will make gains in the house, the only question being as to the size of these gains.

The same condition applies to the senate, with this difference: In the upper body it is scarcely possible that the Democrats can come into control, although they may add enough to their membership to give the insurgents the balance of power. In detail the senatorial situation is as follows: There are thirty-five new men to go in, including successors to four who have died—Dolliver of Iowa, McEnery of Louisiana, Daniel of Virginia and Senator Elect Broward of Florida. Swanson has already been appointed to succeed Daniel. Dolliver's successor will be left to the legislature, which will select a progressive. All the Democrats will be followed by men of their own party, with the exception of Purcell of North Dakota. In that state the probabilities are that McCumber will be re-elected, and the other seat will go to Asie J. Gronna, a progressive.

have favored Dix, generally at two to one, with few takers.

New Jersey, that so often is but an echo of New York, is this year playing a star part on her own hook. This is due to the fact that the Democrats have nominated Woodrow Wilson for governor. In the past the American people have honored their educators, but not by running them for office. If Wilson is elected we may see more college presidents on the firing line. Perhaps it would be no loss if we gave our political economists a chance to put their theories into practice. They certainly could not do worse than the politicians have done.

Professor Wilson has come out squarely for progressive policies all along the line. His campaign has been a revelation of direct and candid speech.

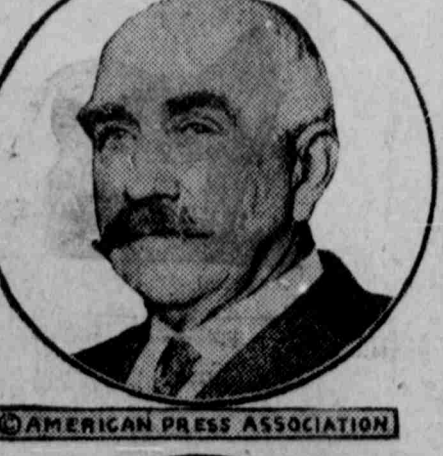

Vivian M. Lewis, the Republican candidate, is an old newspaper man. Mr. Lewis has also declared for some of the progressive policies. The result is in doubt, but Wilson's supporters seem very confident.
In Ohio the Republican managers admit that if the election had been held two weeks ago Harmon would probably have been re-elected. Now they claim the tide is turning in Harding's favor. For one thing, James R. Garfield and the progressives are coming out for the Republican candidate. Neither side is very progressive in Ohio this year, and as a consequence the Socialists are said to be making gains. The Democrats claim the state by a big majority.

Beveridge Appealing to Progressives

One of the most spectacular fights in the nation is that in Indiana. Here the contest is over the senatorship. Beveridge is attacking the Payne-Adrich tariff and appealing to progressives of both parties. John W. Kern, his opponent, expects to get the Democratic vote and some quiet support from the stand pat Republicans. The outcome is very doubtful, but would seem to favor Kern, as the Democrats now have the governor and legislature.
After sweeping the California primaries as an insurgent, Hiram W. Johnson is having another fight with Theodore A. Bell, who was temporary chairman of the last Democratic national convention. Johnson is opposed to the Southern Pacific railroad, and it is thought that for this reason the railroad and stand pat politicians may support Bell. Nevertheless Johnson's
